Summary
Ros Loverson and his friend Daniel are curious about an artist neighbour, and Mr Bennett. They watch while he paints in a kind of trance, and they speculate about his life. Ros and his sister, Finn, are the children of Rosie Loverson, the famous star of the soap opera 'Insiders'. In the show, Rosie Loverson plays Rosie Ransome, and the children are well used in the way her acting career spills over into her private life. When Rosie Ransome dies it is to be feared that the show she plunges into depression. She puts on a brave face for the press, but is suddenly smothered by fans.
The children are still preoccupied with Mr Bennett, who seems flattered by their interest and looks them a painting. Daniel suggests they take the painting to a gallery to be valued. Mr Marshall, the manager of the gallery, recognizes the painting as a work by J.K. Bennett, a successful artist who took his own life after the death of his mother and a particularly bad review. Mr Bennett is keen to paint a picture of Finn - she reminds him of someone - and he has the idea that he is an avid fan of 'Insiders'. The children don't want to tell him that he is living just close to his biggest star for one thing, 'Insiders' dominates too much of their lives already.
Mr Bennett agrees to take the painting of Finn to show Mr Marshall, but when the painting is unrecognised it proves to be not just of Finn but also of Rosie Ransome. It's called Finn you see, and see you don't. The painting is put on display, and it catches a school with the general public who are up in arms about the removal of Rosie from the show. Given all the publicity she is attracting, the programme producers decide they cannot message without Rosie in the soap. Mr Bennett's confidence as an artist is restored, but should the children break the news that Rosie is his neighbour and Finn is her daughter?
